Dear Sir or Madam:

I am writing to communicate my support for the proposed merger between Sirius Satellite Radio and XM Satellite Radio.

I feel strongly that the method of delivery is not the defining aspect of identifying the competitive landscape. As a consumer I have ample opportunity to access audio content via many platforms.

As someone who receives both Sirius and XM, I can state that I enjoy the services. I feel that from a consumer perspective, the merger will allow efficiencies and eliminate duplicity on the SDARS band. This will enable the addition of other programming, as well as other useful services, and that alone is a strong enough reason to allow the merger to pass.

I also feel that the proposed implementation of tiered programming packages will allow other consumers to access the programming on satellite radio. At this point, satellite radio is very small when compared to the well established AM and FM platform, or even Apples I-Pod. I feel strongly that consumers have a very healthy variety in the marketplace, and that a merger between Sirius and XM will help insure that technology and content offerings move forward.

Please give consideration to the many people who see this proposed merger as a true benefit for consumers.

Sincerely,

Spencer Osborne
